TIDECOURT

How a destination film and matching stills can support a hotel or resort presentation.

Fictional concept · Sample of the visual sequence only

Fictional sample. Tidecourt is a self-initiated, fictional resort concept by Predella Studio, not a real development, investment opportunity or approved design. Imagery is illustrative. This is not a complete investor deck.

Introduce the place before discussing its spaces.

Introduce the project and the purpose of the meeting before pressing play. The 75-second Tidecourt film brings architecture, rooms and coastal life into one visual story.

Afterward, pause on a still so the audience can ask about a specific space without following a moving image.

> “Tidecourt is a fictional coastal resort concept. This film introduces the atmosphere and guest experience we are exploring. We will then look at the spaces behind that direction.”

Presenter notes

Point out the relationships visible in the image. In a real project, use a separate verified site plan for location, dimensions and access. Do not infer room counts or site capacity from a concept render.

A private terrace connected to the coast

Shade, outdoor seating and an open coastal view shape the proposed experience of the stay.

Presenter notes

Explain which qualities the project should deliver. For commissioned work, have the design team validate sightlines, privacy and specified materials before presenting them as confirmed features. The image does not establish achievable room rates.

The spatial starting point

A working model helps us discuss the resort wings, courtyard and camera position before agreeing the final visual direction.

Presenter notes

State what is conceptual, what comes from supplied design and what still needs review. A Blender sketch is a rendered image or video; editable model files are a separate deliverable to agree.

What this sample is, and what it is not

The visual part of a presentation.

- Shows how a film, broad views, a guest-scale moment and a working render can serve different moments in a meeting.
- Uses existing assets from Tidecourt, a self-initiated fictional concept. It is not a sample of every package deliverable.
- Contains no financial, operating or investment figures. A real presentation needs the developer's verified project information, team, commercial assumptions and proposed next step.
- Is not a complete investor deck. Decks, editable presentation files and source models are not automatically included in a production.

Questions for the next conversation

- Which parts of the guest experience should the team develop further?
- Which design details remain provisional, and who validates them?
